Things are changing

Would you like to learn Japanese or Chinese? Do you think it's a good idea to learn about environmental problems like climate change and recycling at school? In the USA schools want to start teaching new subjects, not only traditional ones. They want to teach students about problems and things that are important today.

For example, Japan is becoming a very important country for business. Some people think it's better for children to learn Japanese at school than German or Spanish. Spanish is the most popular language in US schools but it's not very good for the students' future jobs.

Lessons of Geography are also changing. Some people think it's more important to learn about problems of the modern world in geography than to learn about continents and states.

Many people don't love the changes. They think it's important for students to study traditional subjects at schools and learn other subjects later. Parents want their children to learn everything but there isn't enough time in the day and children don't want to be at school in the evenings too.
