

A Match Made in Heaven

Wednesdays had always been a special day for Amelia. She was working her shift at the town's café, and just like every Wednesday, Daniel came in for his coffee. She had had a crush on him ever since they were little, but she had kept her feelings close to her chest all these years.

But this Wednesday was different. The second Daniel came in, his eyes searched for Amelia across the room, and once he found her, he smiled at her. Even an act as simple as a little smile made Amelia's heart skip a beat. She returned the smile and got back to work.

At the end of her shift, she noticed something – Daniel hadn't left. She approached him and sat across from him at the table. They started talking and the time flew by in the blink of an eye, turning into hours. That made Amelia hope that maybe Daniel is on the same wavelength as her.

To her surprise, just as her thoughts about their relationship were racing through her mind, Daniel plucked up the courage and confessed his feelings to her. That made Amelia's heart and her cheeks warm. She had hoped that this meant no more beating around the bush.

Daniel asked her to go out with him and the only words that left her lips were, "Better late than never." Both laughed it off and let their minds follow the path of young love, hoping for their happily ever after.